

News for the Pews

Mike McKinley has been in and out of City Rescue Mission for the past three years due to a struggle with substance abuse. After his last stay at the shelter, however, something different happened. Mike realized he was spiritually bankrupt and unable to fight the wiles of the devil that led to his 20-year addiction.

During a visit with shelter director, Jeff Hegenauer, Mike was surprised when Jeff said, "Mike, man, when you have these urges, call somebody—call me!" Mike was stunned by the sincere reaction to his fallen state from someone whom he only considered to be "the head of the shelter" and not a sincere brother in Christ.

"I saw Jeff in a whole new light, and I knew then that this man really cared about me."

Working now in the City Rescue Mission's kitchen as an employee through a staffing agency, Mike sees life from the other side (of the counter). Not only is he working in the kitchen, he gets to encourage some of the very men he may have shared a dorm with in the past. He's also repairing his relationship with his daughter and displays a BIG grin when speaking of his grandchildren. It's obvious we are looking at a man who not only has a new life but a new hope, too.
